The Event

The 2010 U.S. Open Tennis Championship

Always so cool, so consistent, so in control of his emotions and his matches, Roger Federer amazingly let the U.S. Open championship slip from his grasp.

Two points from victory against inexperienced, unheralded Juan Martin del Potro of Argentina -- and two points from a sixth consecutive title at Flushing Meadows and a record-extending 16th Grand Slam overall -- Federer, quite simply, fell apart Monday.

He railed at the chair umpire. His legs grew weary. His double-faults mounted. He could not figure out a way to stop the 6-foot-6 del Potro from pounding forehands past him. In a result as surprising for who lost as how it happened, the sixth-seeded del Potro came back to win his first Grand Slam title by upsetting the No. 1-seeded Federer 3-6, 7-6 (5), 4-6, 7-6 (4), 6-2.

Capping an unprecedented run to the final in which the unseeded, unranked Clijsters defeated both Venus and Serena Williams along the way, Clijsters is now the first woman to have received entry into the tournament via wild card and gone on to claim the title. The victory marked Clijsters second consecutive US Open championship in as many attempts as she last played here in 2005 when she won her only previous Grand Slam title.

Now married to US basketball player Brian Lynch and proud mother to 18 month old daughter Jada, a re-invigorated Clijsters returned to the court earlier this summer with a run to the semifinals in her first tournament back on the circuit (Cincinnati Masters), and quickly found her championship form here at the US Open. As Serena Williams had been quoted before their semifinal encounter on Saturday night, "Kim looks like she's been off (the tour) for about a week".
